killing, and the Militia company, of which ical. Miller is the Captain, was called out.

Various speculations are included in as to the inducement to the act. Some assume that Miller, who was, in August last, Marshal of the town of Lancaster, and who at that time, as it is alleged, was derilect in his duty, was at the time of the killing smarting under a severe, amenviable and rather disparaging criticism of the case of Ward, charged with wrom, as before anated, and that he was sesking, and desired and that he was sesking an opportunity of killing above one who was associated with Rochester in putting down the Lancaster riots, and show conduct had been highly commended, and that he was sesking an opportunity of killing a brace man for the putpose of concealing the coward fee which hed been cherged against him.

Another throug, is, that he was smarting mader a rebuke or fancied insult from Rochester which he also constitued as the concealing the coward fee which hed been cherged against him.

Another throug, is, that he was smarting mader a rebuke or fancied insult from Rochester which he deads of the families of the signal and horizontally as a short of the putpose of concealing the coward fee which hed been cherged against him.

Rev. Charles Kingsley, who has been ying very ill, is the son of an English country rector, and was born in Devon-shire in 1819. He was educated partly at King's College, 1/mdon, and partly at Magdalen College, Cambridge, at which latter place he gained a first-class in classics and a second-class in mathematics. He studied law for a short time after leaving the University, but finally entered the church and became first curnte and subsequently rector of Eversley, in Hampshire. He first attracted attention his novel, "Alten Locke," by which gained the sobriquet of the "Chartist Parson." The success of this navel led him to write a namber of novels and romances, some of which were more really deserving of fame than was "Alton Locke," but none of which equalled it in popularity. Later he turned his attention more particularly to historic studles, and in 1859 he was appointed Protessor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge. His lectures while holding this position were very popular among the young aren, but their accuracy was sometimes called in ques-tion. He resigned his professorship in 1869, and was made Canon of thester.
Last year he visited this country, and met with a warm reception from his many admirers.
